

World War II in the Press

World War II in the Press is a rare collection of images that tell the story of World War II as it was portrayed in the American newspapers and magazines. Signal Corp writers typed up the photo captions and cut them out, pasting them on top of the original photos. The composite images were captured on 4x5 copy film and sent off to the press so there would be no errors in the source of the images. This is how Americans learned of the war efforts, as television didn't exist. These photos represent something more than a collection of war photos. They are a study of our times, our triumphs and defeats, our journalism and the human condition.
