Though distinct aptitudes, these two classes of emotions are most intimately connected: affection is strengthened by sympathy and sympathy is strengthened by affection. Community of interest, opinions, sentiments of culture and mode of life, as being essential to close sympathy, is therefore favorable to close affection. The contrast must not be so great as to exclude sympathy. Finally, want of sympathy prevents great divisions of human beings, such as different races or nations, hereditary castes, classes and adherents of different religions... from intermarrying, even where personal affection plays no part in the choice.² 1 Journal of the Royal Statistical Society, 1865, pp. 274-75. 2 Introduction to Anthropology, by Dr. Theodore Waitz, (London, 1863,) Vol. I, p. 185. 3 Human Marriage, p. 282. There would seem therefore to be in operation a most powerful cause, which for ages to come will make amalgamation of the white and colored races, in this country at least, an impossibility. Between him (the negro) and the white, the race antipathy seems too strong for any great degree of amalgamation ever to take place while the mulatto has the infertility of a hybrid.³ But we have to face the fact that the races do mix in spite of the effect of the law of similarity which makes intermarriage of such rare occurrence. The crossing of the white and colored races in this country is, therefore, not within the lawful bounds of marriage, but outside of the pale of the moral law. That an immense amount of concubinage and prostitution p...
