

Discourses on the Principal Points of the Socinian Controversy (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Discourses on the Principal Points of the Socinian Controversy Why publish a new Volume, on a subject which has already produced so many? Were I to answer this question by pleading the solicitations of friends, I should speak the truth; for such solicitations have been numerous, and some of them entitled to my highest deference. Yet I should present an apology, neither satisfying to the Public, nor to myself. For if an author is not convinced in his own judgment, that his work is either called for by particular circumstances, or likely to be serviceable to the cause of truth, he ought to possess sufficient fortitude to resist the wishes of others; and if he professes to publish in compliance with these wishes alone, he will find very few possessed of sufficient charity to give him credit.
